

3 Most Common Mistakes that Grads make on their first interview

05/27/14 — Author and career counselor, Roy Cohen, offers DO's & DON'T's for this year's crop of college grads when they get to their first-ever job interview:

1. DON'T SOUND LIKE EVERYONE ELSE.

DO incorporate examples of your successes and your failures to demonstrate insight and self-awareness. Most grads forget to distinguish themselves from other candidates when they respond to common interview questions. When you sound like everyone else you lose out on getting the right people to pay attention to you. Rote answers are for robots.

1. DON'T USE POOR GRAMMAR.

DO brush up on your “Elements of Style” and remember to use good grammar. Saying “Me and ...” raises questions about their potential to assume a role which involves interface with important clients.

1. 3. DON'T TELL INTERVIEWER THAT YOU NEED FRIDAYS OFF

TO GO TO YOUR PARENTS' HAMPTONS HOUSE.

DO shut up! Yes, believe it. One of Roy's clients has a son who actually told his internet-company interviewer that he would not be available to work on Fridays (but only in the summer!), because he spends weekends at his parent's place in Watermill.
