Metropolitan Aviation, a Virginia-based private jet management and charter company, announced the naming of Captain Justin

Harris as its new Director of Safety.

“At Metropolitan Aviation, we are dedicated to safety at every level, from flight operations to facilities, in all systems company-wide,” said Tony Massinon, Director of Operations for Metropolitan Aviation. “Justin brings a real drive and contagious enthusiasm to this position, representing to every employee in every department that exceeding industry best standards is our daily charge.”

Captain Harris recently completed the USC Safety Management System course, giving him the essential knowledge – in risk management, program development strategies, and auditing principles – to building and maintaining effective management systems and interoperability with Quality Assurance. Harris reports to Metropolitan Aviation's founder and CEO, Alan R. Cook.
