07/04/13 — IN today's climate of uncertainty in the financial markets, there seem to be ever fewer options for those seeking to make a return on their existing funds. Reliable investment opportunities are scarce, but one avenue that has maintained its gravitas is the housing market.

While growth may have been slow

Property has long proven a sound investment in recent months, there are few markets that can boast any growth at all - so what better time to get on board than the present?

Because many of those seeking to increase their available funds may still be perturbed by the vagaries of the market, specifically the potential return on investment, property developers Regal Green have created an online calculator to assist potential participants in figuring out the figures they could ostensibly make. In addition, the company also include a module on their website to instruct budding Gordon Gekkos on whether they qualify to invest in the Regal Green opportunity.

Volatile as today's markets are, clients of Regal Green remain in good standing to make a substantial return on the sum they contribute toward building projects in the South-East of England. Upon joining the process, participants will receive a monthly return of 6% of their original amount, followed by a lump sum of 25% upon completion of the two-year cycle. Of course, this option may not be right for everybody, and Regal Green invite questions from both the curious and the sceptical.
